DEFENSE AND POSTAL SAVINGS BONDS ON SALE TODAY IN POST OFFICES

The United States Defense Savings Bonds and Postal Savings Bonds are placed on sale in the post office today as part of the national effort to make America impregnable.

The new Defense Savings Bond is similar to the familiar "Baby Bond," of which more than five billion dollars worth have been bought by more than two and a half million Americans since 1935. A Defense Bond may be purchased May 1, or thereafter, for $18.75. In 10 years this bond will be worth $25.00. This is an increase of 33 1-3 per cent equal to an annual interest return of 2.9 per cent, compounded semi-monthly. Any time after 60 days from the date of purchase, the bond may be redeemed for cash, in accordance with a table of redemption values printed on the face of the bond.

For the smaller investor who wants to buy a Government Bond on an easy payment plan, the post office will have a new series of Postal Savings Stamps, at 10 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, $1, and $5. Each purchaser of any Savings Stamp higher than 10 cents will be given free of charge, an attractive pocket album in which to paste his stamps until he has enough to buy a $25 bond or one of higher denomination.

GOULD 5—GORHAM 3

Gould opened its 1941 baseball season with a hard-earned victory over Gorham, N. H. High School. This partially revenges two one-run defeats suffered last year at the hands of this same team.

It looked rather dark for the locals in the first inning when Gorham's lead-off man reached on an error by Berry on his slow roller. Then Ladd and Kidder pounded out hits to score two runs before Amato robbed Martel with a nice running catch on his drive to left. Gorham scored again in the second on two singles and an infield out. Hereafter Jenks settled down and pitched one of the finest games seen here for some time. Whenever he seemed in need of help, Clough would come up with a nice play at short stop to put him back on top again.

Offensively the Gould team was batting against a left-hander for the first time this year and of course expected trouble from Martel who is one of the most capable southpaws in schoolboy ranks. Jenks and Ireland singled in the second inning but could not advance. In the fourth Clough singled, Crockett reached on an error by the catcher, Ireland walked, and two runs came across on infield outs by Robertson and Berry. Gould broke loose again to score three times in the eighth when, with two out, Clough walked and stole second, Crockett reached for the second time on a two-base error by the opponents' catcher, scoring Clough with the 'v' run. Jenks walked as did Ireland and, with the bases clogged "Billy" Robertson, smote a hard single over second base to score tying run. Jenks walked as did Ireland.

It was a tough game for Martel to lose. After pitching sterling ball for seven innings he seemed to lose his control and his catcher had difficulty holding him.

WITH THE MUMPS AT CAMP BLANDING

This is a poem sent home by Lee Billings of Milton to his sister from Camp Blanding, Florida, while convalescing from the mumps.

How I lay in my little bed,
Jaw swollen up and Oh my head
I have the mumps so they say,
And I'll be here for many a day:
Two days gone and several more to go.

Then I'll be out of here I know,
Now being a shut-in is no fun,
I'd rather be out with my little gun.

I shouldn't kick, I'm lucky I guess
But without you I'm a heck of a mess.

Prominent Wisconsin Attorney—Gould Graduate—Honored By Associates

The following extract from the March 27 issue of the La Crosse (Wisconsin) Tribune and Leader-Press will be interesting to local friends of Frank Winter. Mr. Winter is a graduate of Gould Academy and is remembered by many local people.

A dinner for members of the La Crosse Bar association had a double significance when Frank Winter entertained them last evening at his home, 1625 Madison street. The day was Mr. Winter's 87th birthday and it also marked the 60th anniversary of his entrance into a profession from which he retired only last year.

During the dinner, for which the association sent a bouquet of flowers for the celebrant and corsage for Mrs. Winter, occasion was taken to present "An Appreciation," a parchment inscribed with names of all the lawyers present, which will be framed.

Words of tribute are "The La Crosse Bar to our friend and Co-Worker Frank Winter. Your long and distinguished career as a lawyer; your knowledge of the law and your fighting qualities are well known to us all. A ripe scholar, your alma mater, Bowdoin, conferred upon you the degree of Master of Arts and you wear the emblem of Phi Beta Kappa. You have been a thorough student of our country and a diligent student of and actor in public affairs. Now as the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and your work is mostly done kindly accept this token of our appreciation. March 26, 1941 the 87th anniversary of your admission to the Bar."

Cameron L. Baldwin presented the gift and in his acceptance Mr. Winter reminisced upon happenings of years gone by. Fred Steele, president of the Bar association called upon all the lawyers seated at tables in three rooms of the Winter home.

Assisting Mrs. Winter in entertaining were Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Dimmick of Black River Falls, Wis., the former Mr. Winter's cousin. Mr. and Mrs. Ray Landon of the latter the couple's daughter; Mrs. Maude Batchelder, Mrs. Russell Hart, Bob and Dick Langdon.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

MAKE THEM "DIFFERENT"

Shots such as this—with an individual, "different" touch—lend life to your album. Try some, as a change from ordinary, routine poses.

EVERYBODY has his preferences—in pictures, in reading matter, in victuals, and other things. Abraham Lincoln summed it up neatly when he said, "You will like this story, if this is the kind of story you like."

However, despite differences of taste, most people agree on one point. They feel that something individual—something a little bit out of the ordinary—is better. It is the "different" treatment—the "individual touch"—that counts.

That's especially true in snapshots. A clever idea—a different pose—a little individuality in the lighting or arrangement—these give you pictures that make people sit up and take notice. And they're more interesting to you, too—they give you more satisfaction.

Consider one concrete case—snapshots of children. You know that most of them are "too much alike." As a rule, they tell no story —the child simply stands or sits and looks at the camera. Yet every child has a personality of its own. He—or she—has personal mannerisms, and personal activities. These are picture material, and will lend that necessary touch of truth and individuality to your pictures.

Trouble? None at all. Shots of Junior curled up on the couch in some absurd pose while he reads the Sunday comics—shots of your little girl lecturing her doll on proper behavior—shots of them both trying to teach the puppy to do tricks—these are just as easy to get as the old, routine shots. Easier, sometimes—because children are natural actors, and take readily to an idea if it seems like play.

And this is just one field. The same rule applies to all other snapshots. Seek the individual touch—the "different" flavor—and you'll build an album that is much, more interesting.

That Nagging Backache
May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up at night, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

Life in New Army Camps Different From Days of '17

Many Features of Civilian Life Are Retained; U. S. to Require Fortifying Bread With Vitamin B Complex.

By BAUKHAGE
National Farm and Home Hour Commentator.

(WNU Service, 1343 H Street N. W., Washington, D. C.)
WASHINGTON.—There is dry, white mud on my feet and white dust in my eyes. My nose has taken on a slightly more roseate tinge than usual.
From early this morning I watched a segment of Uncle Sam's new army through a driving mist of memories which are all that is left of the "young army" with which I marched 25 years ago.

I heard that irritatingly familiar cadence of reveille come floating across a Virginia parade ground—a once green fields now scarred with thousands of hob-nailed boots. I saw the sleepy-eyed youths pile out of fresh, wooden barracks, looking no younger in their neat slacks and canvas leggings than we looked to each other in our lumpy wrap leggings and baggy breeches. I saw the ones in blue denim, ready for fatigue duty, looking just as we did. Did we snap a more precise salute?
Did our middle-fingers stretch down a little straighter along the seam of our trousers, and our chests puff out a little farther when we came to "shun"? Were we a little more solemnly important when we changed guard, with our sentries at a stiff "port" barking "special orders" at each other in our best imitation of the way the sergeant barked at us?

Well, maybe. And maybe the sun shone brighter then than it does today, too.

Visit Fort Belvoir.

The camp I visited is Fort Belvoir, down the road a bit from Mount Vernon, and the highway there divides the old and the new. Belvoir has been a permanent engineering camp since the last war and now, across the road, is a new soldier-city of fresh-cut pine, which stands where the pine trees themselves stood, only a few months ago. This replacement camp eventually will accommodate 10,000 men who, like the Sultan, in Omar Khayyam, take their one day's rest—only instead of a day, it is 13 weeks and it is no rest. Here the boys, classified for the Engineer corps, get their first taste of army life, drill and discipline.

On this spot I saw familiar sights and others, strangely unfamiliar to a soldier of the emergency of 1917-1919.

There was the Post Exchange, an institution as old as an army post itself. But in one corner was a fountain dispensing ice cream sodas, and in another, a taproom dispensing the amber fluid—both beverages unknown in the camps of my soldiering days.

I saw the familiar barracks—but these were equipped with an air-circulating system.

I saw the neatly made cots—but I also saw a hostess house—at that moment housing a bevy of chorus girls who were putting on a Broadway review for the boys that night.

I met the hostess, a motherly woman and two junior hostesses—but not so junior that the girls back home need be too jealous.

Civilian "Trimnings" Retained.

Frankly, I went to the camp looking for signs of a "cream puff" atmosphere that some of the old-timers hinted were turning military life into a sort of prolonged college reunion. Perhaps that is happening. But the officers in charge of recreation with whom I talked were typical, serious military men. They said it was necessary to provide diversion and entertainment. We are not at war. Important as the defense of democracy may be, so far the spirit of the crusade has not touched the people. The people—in uniform and out—must not be allowed to feel that this period before the colors is an interruption in citizen life, but rather a part of it. And the normal habits of the civilian must not be cut off from the boys in camp. That seems to be the theory of the "trimmings" which the selectee is being offered by Uncle Sam.

I saw work, too. Men shouldering shovels as well as rifles; swinging pick-axes as well as doing sentry duty.

I went over a military road that had been cut out of forest and swamp, crossed a bridge strong enough to carry a tank, all built between morning and mid-afternoon—the work of the engineer officers and men. Most of the boys who did the actual work had had only a few weeks' training in the expert business of construction and destruction which is the engineer's task.

Government to Require Fortifying Bread Flour

When the Bible succinctly compressed the material needs of man into a single sentence—"give us this day our daily bread"—it put a world of meaning into a few short words. Unfortunately, while man still has needs which his daily bread once occupied, the modern loaf does not satisfy them.

So there is going to be a law—or at least a regulation by the Federal Security administrator which will have the force of law. This regulation will require standard bread flour to contain some of the ingredients vital to man's present needs, namely the "vitamin B complex." The Food and Drug administration has already promulgated a tentative standard. To meet it, certain properties which bread flour contained before modern refining processes removed them will be artificially restored. A new milling process which removes the indigestible hulls but not the health-giving qualities—the thiamin chloride, the nicotinic acid, the riboflavin and the iron—has just been invented also.

There is a long scientific explanation of why we need the "vitamin B complex" in our daily bread. To a layman this is the way a member of the department of agriculture explained it:

Thiamin Increases Courage.

"Thiamin," he said, "keeps you from growing jittery and nervous; it calms your nerves and provides a wider path between irascibility and uncertainty on one side and calmness and certainty on the other. It gives you courage."

"And that," he added, "is one reason, they tell us, for the bravery of the German troops under the terrific strain of modern warfare. We understand that beside giving the soldiers bread enriched with vitamins, the German army has a ration of vitamin pills for its men."

The nicotinic acid in the so-called enriched flour, prevents the dread pellegra.

Unfortunately, enriching the flour does not help those people who do not get the white bread at all.

Declining Tourist Trade Costly to Canada

In America there is a man who, purely as a hobby, has constituted himself as a sort of one-man travel and publicity agent for Canada. His name is Schuyler Baldwin Terry. He started out to be a historian with a Ph. D. at the University of Chicago, took a course at the University of London, wrote an authoritative book, entitled "The Financing of the Hundred Years War," quoted in debates in parliament. Then he suddenly decided that he was more interested in economics than history and got a job as office boy in an old New England banking firm. He accumulated a comfortable fortune, retired, and ever since has devoted his time to travel and talking and writing about the development of a closer bond between this nation and our sister-nation to the north.

Mr. Terry is particularly disturbed about the falling off of American visitors to Canada of late which, he says, has cost Canada a hundred million dollars. False and malicious rumors, concerning conditions resulting from the war and alleged difficulties which might be encountered in returning to this country, he declares are causing Americans to stay away from Canada. The dollars which Canada has lost, he points out, mean just that many fewer purchases Canada can make in the United States.

Secret of Tanks

Army tanks were so named almost by accident. They were called "tanks" by the British war office early in the 1914-18 war, before they made their public appearance, in order to prevent information of their real nature passing into enemy hands. Letters, telegrams, and telephone messages concerning "tanks" would cause no suspicion regarding their real nature . . . and the name stuck.

Tanks were first used in the British attack on Flanders on September 15, 1916.

earliest statements of Churchill himself, in the continued demand that the British defenders take to their ships and escape while they might, in the sudden "suicide" of Alexandros Korizis, premier of Greece, who, it was announced officially from Athens, took his own life in anguish at the failure of his country's defense.

The turbulent character of the news caused this death to be reported as a mystery for nearly 48 hours, with German sources claiming that the British had murdered Korizis "because he had wanted to surrender the Greek army," and other sources claiming that he was murdered by Nazi agents who wanted his natural successor, said to be more pro-Axis, in his place.

But King George II folled any such plot, if plot there was, by taking the reins of government in his own hands, and forming a military cabinet to take the place of that headed by Korizis.

Kostas Kotzias was named vice premier and charged with the difficult task of forming the new cabinet.

In the midst of this gloomy outlook, President Roosevelt said that one of the dangers of the entire American setup for the national defense and aid to embattled democracies was that the people "are not sufficiently aware of the serious character of the European war situation."

This condition, the President said, it will be his purpose to attempt to rectify, though how he was to do it was not immediately apparent.

CONVOYS:

And Mr. Tobey

Senator Tobey of New Hampshire got onto the front pages with a bang when he, the original foe of convoying, openly declared that he had been informed by certain persons whose anonymity he protected, that the United States already was engaged in conveying aid-to-Britain materials on Atlantic waters.

This was immediately and categorically denied by two authorities. These were Secretary Hull and Admiral Stark. The administration rested on these denials, and administration spokesmen said they certainly believed the public should believe the positive testimony of these two men rather than the unsupported and anonymous evidence presented by Senator Tobey.

However, though this apparently spared Tobey's verbal guns, Senator five stepped into the breach and took up the fight and always in the background were Senator Wheeler and other opponents to keep kicking the anti-administration ball around.

Whether's slogan was that the public wanted to keep the country out of war, but the Gallup poll found that 77 per cent of the people were even willing to send part of the navy and part of the air force overseas right now, though only 17 per cent were interested in sending part of the army.

But there seemed a definite dissatisfaction with the British convoy method, that of sending 30 or 40 ships with a couple of small naval vessels as guard, and no guard at all until the forty-second parallel of latitude was reached.

The American method, of parallel lines of naval vessels guarding the whole route, and each ship moving at its natural speed, gained more favor, yet how Britain could spare the ships without more aid from the U. S. navy appeared the major problem.

And this brought the convoy question popping up again and again.

JUGOSLAVIA:

Gestures

The sudden capitulation of the entire Jugoslavian army after nine days of brave fighting against insuperable odds and under impossible conditions, made of the Serbian and Slovene resistance simply a noble gesture that brought a sympathetic response from watchers on both sides of the Atlantic.

Maj. George Fielding Elliot, one military columnist, said the Jugoslav sacrifice was not in vain, and pointed out the military advantages it gave to Greece.

Yet to the man in the street it had been a vain sacrifice, they were unable to understand its benefits, and all that emerged was the gesture of bravery, of independence, of hoping against hope that their autonomy, their homes, their nation and their freedom might be saved.

Many expressed themselves puzzled that the Jug-slav nation should have resented at all.

The picture of what ensued was brief but poignant. For the ill-prepared and ill-equipped army found itself with Stukas overhead, with Panzer troops in front, on the flanks, and even behind its lines, the slow-footed infantry and inadequate mechanized forces giving no time even for flight to the hills, where the Serbs and Slovenes had hoped to conduct guerrilla warfare and prolong the struggle.

The surrender, which followed as a matter of course, was complete, and put Jugoslavia in nine days completely out of the war.

U. S. ARMY:

Training

The early contention of many army experts that America could not hope to train men in modern warfare in one calendar year, starting with the raw civilian, brought from many sources the word that it would be more than borne out now that the troops were proceeding into advanced training.

The army had now reached, in numbers, well past 1,200,000 men, and in this group were 27 infantry divisions alone. These men, it was said, already had been given a good course in basic discipline and ordinary infantry training, but even this was entirely preliminary to serious consideration of modern warfare, and was not finished yet.

One American officer, in the Army Journal, criticized the war department for permitting delays in the training of troops. It was said that there was a good deal of irritation expressed in high department quarters over the frank words of this officer.

One of the chief bottlenecks, of course, has been the lack of equipment of the newest types with which to train the men, assuming that their basic course is soon finished.

But the article in the Army Journal and another in the Cavalry Journal commenting on the first, revealed that our army is lagging in instruction on the use of flame-throwers, on defense against chemical warfare and in many other fields, particularly as to modern combat.

A plan to cut the draft age down to 18 met early antagonism in congressional circles, but that the administration had not abandoned the idea was seen in facts and figures later made public.

For instance, the Census Bureau estimated that the lowering of the age limit would place 3,643,267 more men within the range of the selective service law.

But if the maximum age limits were lowered to 30 years, more than 5,000,000 would be taken out of the law's scope, it was said.

LONDON:

Really Blasted

Least Britain might think that Hitler had moved all his air force into Africa and the Balkans, the German Luftwaffe started a terrific series of raids on London, doing the British capital damage on such a large scale and causing so many casualties that accurate estimates were not obtainable a week later.

Lord and Lady Stamp, the former honored repeatedly in this country, were killed, removing an important figure from the government. City block after city block was demolished. Hundreds and hundreds of persons were wiped out in underground shelters, struck by direct hits.

The first raid lasted 10 hours. The second, Hitler's "birthday blitz," was only slightly less severe.

Britain came out of it with Londoners fighting mad, walking about the streets, looking at the wreckage, demanding "Bomb Berlin, Bomb Berlin!" They scrawled these words with chalk on the sidewalks, on the walls of ten buildings, they chanted it in the carjays of their wrecked city.

The R. A. F. had stormed Berlin a few days before the first big raid, and the raid itself had been a reprisal—but the British forgot this and demanded more reprisals. This the R. A. F. did the following day, the air ministry announcing that bombs of a larger caliber than ever used before had been dropped on the German capital.

German admissions of damage were small. Only 15 had lost their lives in the first raid, Berlin said, and no casualties and minor damage was reported in the second. How true this minimizing of the damage was, no official report revealed, but returning British airmen claimed the result of the reprisal was "extensive."

The slamming attacks of the German air force continued all over the British Isles with one foray over northern Ireland, with Belfast hard hit.

The war at sea, also, was causing the British a heavy toll, German claims running way past a quarter of a million tons a month, and the British halting their usual practice of announcing the figures once a week, and claiming that this was not a fair method of informing the public as to losses. Henceforth, the ministry of information said, the totals would be given out only monthly.

Britain, it was evident, was a long way from meeting the U-boat menace and soon would be facing a serious crisis in the sea battle.

STRIKES:

FDR's Hand

There was much evidence that President Roosevelt was about to call for a hand in the strike poker game, especially since the about-to-be-settled coal strike was slow in settling.

This appeared to be an impasse not of strikers, but rather of mine management and operators, for the northern and southern operators could not agree, and the W.M.U. demanded agreement first.

The decision of the President to intervene appeared based on a report that steel production had been curtailed from 100 to 95 per cent of capacity because of the coal shortage.

The White House felt that if the soft coal strike already was affecting this primary and vital defense industry, indications were that he might take an early hand in the strike himself, and rush it to settlement.

Even at that, steel men said, the reopening of the mines would be followed by a continued shortening of steel production until the newly mined coal could find itself into the steel furnaces and ovens.

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1941

THEY SAY:

The love of dirt is among the earliest of passions, as it is the latest. Mud-pies gratify one of our first and best instincts. So long as we are dirty we are pure. Fondness for the ground comes back to a man after he has run the round of pleasure and business, eaten dirt and sown wild oats, drifted about the world and taken the wind of all its moods. The love of digging in the ground (or of looking on while he pays another to dig) is as sure to come back to him as he is sure, at last, to go under the ground and stay there. To own a bit of ground, to scratch it with a hoe, to plant seeds, and watch their renewal of life—this is the commonest delight of the race, the most satisfactory thing a man can do.
When Cicero writes of the pleasures of old age, that of agriculture is chief among them.

To dig in the mellow soil—to dig moderately, for all pleasure should be taken sparingly—is a great thing.
One gets strength out of the ground as often as one touches it with a hoe. . . It is not simply potatoes and beets and corn and cucumbers that one raises in a well-hood garden; it is the average of human life. There is life in the ground; it goes into the seeds; and it also, when it is stirred up, goes into the man who tills it. The hot sun on his back as he bends to his shovel and hoe, or contemplatively rakes the warm and fragrant loam is better than much medicine. The buds are coming out on the bushes around about; the blossoms of the fruit-trees begin to show; the blood is running up the grape-vines in streams, you can smell the wild flowers on the near bank; and the birds are flying and glancing and singing everywhere. . .

Hoeing in the garden on a bright, soft May day, when you are not obliged to, is nearly equal to the delight of going troutling. . . Blessed agriculture! If one does not have too much of it. . . In order to enjoy agriculture you do not want too much of it, and you want to be poor enough to have a little inducement to work moderately yourself.
Hoe while it is Spring and enjoy the best anticipations. It does not much matter if things do not turn out so well. Charles Dudley Warner

Life is short—while we speak it flies; enjoy, then, the present, and forget the future; such is the moral of ancient poetry, a graceful and wise moral. Bulwer-Lytton

Over 100,000 acres of land in the Mount Katahdin region, one of the most rugged and most beautiful mountain and forest areas in the east has been purchased by

of Maine as a State Park where Maine residents and visitors to the Sailors don't like to be called a "gob", they prefer to be called just plain "Sailor." When you refer to a man-o-war as a boat a sailor knows that you are a landlubber.

All men who go to sea call them ships or vessels, ships preferred.
Boats to sailors are the small craft carried aboard ship.

Apprentice Seamen spend about five weeks at a training station before being sent aboard ship or to a Navy Trade School. At the training station they are outfitted with their uniforms and learn the rudiments of military training and discipline.

About two per cent of the men in the Navy attend Navy Trade Schools, the other ninety-eight per cent are taught their trades aboard ship, the greatest trade school in the world where every man is taught a trade by the practical method of doing the actual work under the supervision of an experienced tradesman, a Navy Petty Officer.

Probation Association Honors Shoemaker

CHARLES L. CHUTE, executive director, the National Probation Association which meets in annual conference in New England in May. Sponsored by the Association's 17,000 members including judges, probation and parole officers, the meeting will honor John Augustus, Boston shoemaker, who began the probation movement there a century ago. A feature of the conference, the Association's thirty-fourth, will be the dedication in Suffolk Court House of a bronze tablet honoring John Augustus on Memorial Day. One subject of the centennial conference and observance, said Mr. Chute, is to "dramatize the crime prevention and treatment functions of well organized probation and parole services and juvenile courts as means of reducing the nation's annual crime bill."

TIPS to Gardeners

WITH the supply of many popular spring-flowering bulbs cut off because of the war in Europe, gardeners are seeking certain substitutes.

The color and form of many annual flowers makes them excellent choices for replacing the bulb favorites. As in the case of bulbs, the seed of these annuals may be planted in the early fall, for blossoming early the following summer.

The fresh yellow color of Daffodils, for instance, may be captured nearly as well in the petals of Sunshine Calendula, or in the rich hues of California Poppy (Extra Golden).

The soft colors associated with the Tulip may be replaced best by Larkspur, with its tints of white, blue, pink, rose, lilac, and carmine. The newer, tall-growing Super Majestic Larkspurs are most desirable.

The blossom-crowded spikes of Snapdragons are likened by many to the Hyacinth. It is best to grow the dwarf rust-resistant strains of Snapdragons, with attractive varieties such as Compact Bedding Bronze, and Salmon Pink adaptable also because of their suitability for massed bedding, as Tulips are so often used.

Brightening a Flagstone Floor.
QUESTION: How can I brighten up a new broken flag floor that we have just had put down on our porch? Could I take off its dusty look with a polishing of liquid wax?

Answer: After brick, stone or tile is laid in cement mortar, it should be scrubbed with a solution of muriatic acid, to remove any cement that may have been smeared on the surface. Use one part muriatic acid in twenty parts of water; allow to act for a few minutes, then rinse with clear water. Work on a small area at a time. When mixing the solution, pour the water slowly into the acid, stirring constantly. As this acid is highly corrosive, wear rubber gloves and old clothes; be careful not to get any of it on your skin. You can enrich the color of the stone by applying a liberal coat of raw linseed oil, mixed half-and-half with turpentine. After several hours of soaking, wipe off the excess oil. Try the oil first on some hidden part of the floor, to see how you like the effect.

"Crazing" Varnish.
Question: Is it a usual condition, in all highly figured mahogany, to develop surface scratches, known as "crazing"? This condition has developed in my bedroom suite, which is English Chippendale, crotch mahogany. Can this condition be remedied at home, and will it recur after it has been repaired?

Answer: Crazing in the varnish finish is not natural on any wood. This condition is usually caused by the drying out of the varnish. If the crazing is not very deep, light sandpapering will remove it, followed by a wiping with turpentine to clean the surface; after this, apply a thin coat of varnish. Deeply crazed varnish must be removed and the furniture refinished.

Water-Soaked Floor.
Question: We have just purchased and have moved to the mainland a house that has been standing in salt water for some time; for about a year water covered the floors at high tide. What solution can we use for washing the floors that will remove the salt from the wood?

Answer: Nothing will be more effective than plain water, in which salt is soluble. Even with this, however, I greatly doubt if all of the salt can be removed. I should live in the house for a year or two, to study the effect, with the idea of replacing the floors if necessary. Mildew is not to be feared.

Washing Down Paint.
Question: Is there a liquid with which I can wash down painted walls to take off dirt, but not the paint?

Answer: There is on general sale at most paint stores a powder made of a cereal compound, which is very satisfactory for washing painted surfaces. Or, you can dissolve a teaspoonful of trisodium phosphate in a gallon of tepid water. After the wall has been washed with this solution, rinse with clear water. Start working at the floor level and wash up toward the ceiling, to avoid making dirty streaks.

Paint or Stain for Shingle.
Question: Which is the more enduring, shingle stain or paint?

Answer: Wood shingles on a roof should never be painted. They will last longer if stained with a good quality shingle stain. Wood shingles used as a wall siding can either be painted or stained. The lasting properties of paint or stain will be about equal if they are of a good quality.

Waterproof Glue.
Question: How can glue for wood be made waterproof?
Answer: That will not be an easy job to do at home. It will be far simpler to buy waterproof glue. One excellent variety is a glue made of casein that can be had at a hardware store. While this is mixed with water, it becomes highly water resistant when it dries.

THE STORY SO FAR: Intelligence Officer Benning learned in Mexico City that 200,000 foreign troops under Van Hassek were poised along the Rio Grande for an invasion of the United States. He succeeded in gaining the confidence of Flenke and Bravot, two enemy officers, before returning to Washington. Flagwill, acting chief of Military Intelligence, told him that forces were also reported massing in the Mediterranean and the Far East. Benning continued to pose as an enemy agent when Flenke later appeared in the capital. Without warning, four southern cities were attacked from the air. Washington was heavily bombed and the President killed in the assault. National forces were ordered mobilized, but the army was ill prepared to repulse the well trained and equipped enemy columns which were about to advance against them.

Now continue with the story.

INSTALLMENT VIII CHAPTER VIII

Captain Franklin Boll, in command of two outpost companies of the 11th United States Infantry in the vicinity of Laredo, had patrols along the Rio Grande watching for the first Van Hassek wave. Word had flashed through of the bombing of San Antonio and Boll knew that the land invasion must be shaping itself already for a vital blow at Texas when daylight came.

A corporal slunk into the company command post shortly after 2 A. M.

"There's a lot of soft noises and some splashing down along the river, Cap'n," the corporal reported. "My guess is some of 'em is across in skills and it'll not be long before they're putting in footbridges."

Captain Boll decided to investigate. Proceeding cautiously down toward the Rio Grande, Boll paused every few minutes to listen. Once he thought he heard the cough of a man out across the water. But there were no sounds of boats, no indications of those first creeping operations of e-river crossing by night.

"You must have been hearing things, Lear," Boll whispered disgustedly.

"Not me, sir," Corporal Lear stood his ground. "They was making some noise down there, even if they have hushed up now."

Boll was creeping nearer to the river when the corporal gripped his arm. At the same instant Lear sprawled flat on the ground and cautiously maneuvered his bolt-action Springfield rifle into firing position. Boll's pulse leaped as he caught the glint of black figures silhouetted in the dawn starlight at a stone's throw distant.

The shadows moved guardedly. As they came within a score of paces, Lear released the safety lock of his rifle and laid his eye along its barrel.

The shulking shadows in the night had disappeared into a narrow aisle. Shortly they reappeared. Boll's eye now picked out the tell-tale outlines of a large scuttish-shaped steel helmet that dashed a Van Hassek soldier. Lear caught the silhouette at the same instant and easily squeezed the trigger of his rifle.

The vindictive bark of Lear's Springfield brought the sharp echo of a cry of pain. A figure rose in the night and collapsed in a forward sprawl. In the same instant came stabs of flame and the wild ping of bullets.

Boll drew his automatic pistol from its holster. The firing ceased, which warned Boll that Van Hassek's patrol was maneuvering for position.

"All right, Lear, let's get out of here," he commanded. By alternately crawling, rolling, and running crouched close to the ground, they reached the outpost position at last.

"If this turns out to be a war, it was me fired the first shot, Cap'n," Corporal Lear exulted.

Colonel Denn's voice sang over the field telephone from his position a mile back where he had his regiment lightly dispersed along a sandy ridge.

"What's that shooting, Boll?" the colonel wanted to know.

"Enemy, sir," Boll reported calmly. "I saw them myself this time. Their first bridgehead wave is across the Rio Grande and moving in on us."

"All right, sit tight until you verify the crossing and develop the strength of their bridgehead waves. When things get hot drop back, but don't get yourself involved in a serious fight at this time. Keep me informed of developments."

Colonel Denn had spent a fretful night, well knowing the tight pinch in which he might find his regiment at dawn. His regiment was at peace strength, rifle companies running as low as seventy, total strength 1,132 officers and men. No artillery support had been sent him from Fort Sam Houston, his only supporting weapons were the 37-millimeter and small mortars of his weapons companies. His ammunition supply was less than one day of fire.

Such a thing as interdicting suspected points of enemy river crossing was out of the question. He had given Boll, in outpost, eight machine guns and some light mortars.

Lightning flashed in the distance. A shrill screech came plowing through the night. High explosives crashed in to turn night into bedlam. Fragments found a victim who fell with a howl of pain. The crew of a machine gun was dropped. Men scattered, lay flat on their faces, helpless against this hurricane of destruction that howled down upon them across the Rio Grande.

All existence was now engulfed by the seething uproar of artillery. Boll saw that the regiment was claiming the fullest force of Van Hassek's rage.

Half an hour and Boll's casualties were twenty. Patrols had been sighted, an increasing number of skulkers were reported closing in. Boll saw that his position was becoming untenable.

He started his men slowly to the rear, with two squads covering his withdrawal. The enemy, suspicious of a possible trap in the night, followed cautiously. From this Boll guessed that only the first scattering bridgehead troops were in action. But, having guessed that the Americans were without benefit of artillery, the Van Hassek officers now would use the main bridge and move across the Rio Grande in force.

Boll had covered less than two hundred yards when a runner arrived from Colonel Denn.

"The colonel says get back as fast as you can!" the messenger panted. "Regiment is pulling out right away for the Nueces."

Half an hour later, Boll panted into the regimental position. Captain March, assistant plans and training officer, came hurrying up from a vacated regimental position.

"Regiment pulled out twenty minutes ago," March reported to Boll. "You're to follow at once as rear guard. Trucks are ready behind this hill. Colonel Denn left you some baldoliers of extra ammunition, but we ought to get back of the Nueces before we fight. Second Division is taking position somewhere back there. Hurry your men along, Captain!"

By jamming his men seventeen to the truck, Boll got his command on wheels. Two trucks went to the wounded, one to his three remaining machine guns. He studied the luminous dial of his watch, an anxious scowl on his face as his convoy made ready to pull out. The hour was a little past three o'clock.

A plane shot overhead, traveling high and fast. Its shrilling motors sent a chill down the captain's spine.

"It'll be just too bad for us if we're not at the Nueces by daylight," he muttered to Captain March. "And with light due in half an hour, I'm afraid we just can't make it!"

Major General Brill, area commander, kept his head through tangled hours whose crises might have put an officer of lesser mettle in a dizzy whirl.

Inventory disclosed that the Second Division had escaped the sudden storm with loss of forty-odd cargo trucks, seventeen men, five officers, and two pieces of artillery. Having given the Second its orders to assemble and march on Kirk, Brill set about his final tactical plans.

From time to time Brill and his staff were interrupted by reports of air disasters over New Orleans, Galveston, and Houston. Total losses there aggregated twelve hundred.

General Brill directed his senior aide to get General Hague at Washington on the long-distance. The hour was nearing three o'clock when the Chief of Staff of the Army reported ready to talk.

"My best judgment is to pull out of here," Brill said, after he had reported latest developments in Texas. "We're too thin to make a fight for San Antonio, but we can do some good delaying back of the Colorado and Brazos while you get troops enough into the Fort Worth country to make a stand."

The Hague voice responded with quiet firmness, "You'll proceed at once against the enemy, Brill, and make a stand in front of San Antonio with your Second Division."

Brill groaned. "But Hague, are you sure you understand the whole situation down here? It's simply inviting a lot of nasty losses to no purpose. I haven't force enough to—"

"Let's not debate the matter," General Hague interrupted stoutly. "Is that clear, Brill?"

"Perfectly, sir." There was neither remonstrance nor equivocation in the area commander's voice now.

In a calm voice Brill repeated the Hague decision to his staff. He offered no comment. Without speaking, the staff went to work on its new plan.

Circling to the south, Brill found the due-south road to Kirk, which was under military traffic control, and sped to the village, where he found General Mole, division commander. Mole was a thin bit of military hickory now nearing retirement age.

General Mole received his superior's battle orders with a monosyllable of acquiescence, as if to hoard his faded energies, and promptly set to work with his staff. The division staff was familiar with the country and made prompt plans for organization of a defensive position. Orders were ready within half an hour, and since there was no enemy immediately in prospect, the regiments proceeded to their positions in their cargo trucks.

General Brill stood in the growing dawn gravely watching the Second pass out to its battle lines. A force of 10,837 enlisted men and two warrant officers, led by 546 officers.

As Captain Boll sprang into his station wagon with his lieutenants, and sped to the head of his truck column to set the pace, his eye caught the flash of light that turned the waning night into day some miles ahead of him.

"Step on her!" he barked at his driver. "They'll spot us in a minute—and we're still in artillery range."

Boll sat with hands gripping his knees while he observed the bursts. Luckily they were striking to the right and doing no damage. But shortly the firing ceased, the air observer roared by again with a flare, and rushed off to radio correction to the distant gunners.

He saw that there was the first touch of gray in the air, dawn only a matter of minutes. His jaw snapped shut as he faced the front, eyes glued to the road. A new vengeance would leap down upon his column as soon as light came, a vengeance he would be little able to cope with. It would be a miracle if he reached the Nueces with half of his men and trucks.

As the night thinned out, he caught the distant hum of this new menace.

Boll broke out the glass windows of his station wagon with the butt of his automatic. He thrust his head out and peered into the sky. Planes were circling overhead like so many mad wasps waiting the instant of better visibility. There was not long to wait. As night shed its last veil, the war falcons swooped one at a time to pluck the little caravan to bits with their talons of steel.

Men in the trucks opened fire with their rifles. But the attacking planes flew with the speed of the wind. They dashed low, pumping bullets from hot machine guns, releasing their fragmentation bombs, and in a twinkling were gone. Then back they came, one at a time at irregular intervals, to plaster the road with their fury.

Overhead the flock was growing. Fourteen planes, he estimated. Two squadrons, force enough to tear him to pieces bit by bit unless miracles of good fortune and bad marksmanship attended him along the red course to the Nueces. Inevitably, dropping down time after time without other hindrance than the random fire of his riflemen, the air-men would take their relentless toll.

A truck went out, the third one back from Boll. It cracked up across the road under impact of a bomb. The driver slumped dead in his seat. Men piled out and began scattering out of the storm. Boll stopped his car, ran back to straighten out the snarl.

Three planes zoomed down his column, knifing the road. He saw two of his men fall. He gave instructions to a sergeant and two corporals. They were to pass word down the column. Hereafter stricken trucks were to be shoved to the side of the road, survivors and wounded distributed to other trucks as they passed along. All were to act promptly on their own initiative.

Boll ran back to his station wagon, leaped in. The car was vibrating with the gentle motion of idling motors.

A shout went up from the men in Boll's truck. A plane crashed out of the sky and whanged into the gray earth. It burst instantly into flames. Boll's riflemen had claimed another bird in this unequal clash. But the next instant brought red retaliation. Another truck nosed off the road in a crush of wounded men and dead. Boll saw the survivors act promptly to extricate themselves, gather up the maimed and flag down succeeding vehicles.

He wondered how close his trucks were to the limit of their carrying capacity. Three trucks out, seven more men wounded. The more seriously wounded men required space in which to lie down in their agony. The village of Encinal flashed by. Boll shook his head and swore bitterly. Encinal told him that he had little more than started on his long, desperate run. Next would come Artesia Wells, which would be little more than halfway to the Nueces.

He looked at his watch and saw the hour was short of six o'clock. He groaned and passed a tormented hand across his face. Misgivings struck him of making it through. His mind made a hasty calculation. At their rate of kill, those vultures would tear his column to pieces before he could run under the dubious cover ahead.

Decision snapped in his mind as he saw a new flight swarming into the fight. The birdmen were traveling high, but heading straight into the conflict.

More than twenty more planes he guessed in the haze of tragic discovery. His eye raced over the terrain. There were mesquite, juniper thickets, some rugged dwarf pine. Scattered, his men would have refuge until Van Hassek's columns wheeled up.

He roared an order to stop the truck and leaped to the ground. The unwounded men with him he instructed to keep up their rifle fire. Standing beside the road he signaled a halt, motioned the command to de-

MOTORIST, HOW TYPICAL ARE YOU?

Meet Mr. John Doakes, the typical American motorist. He is between 40 and 45 years old, and has a wife and two children, a boy and a girl. He works and lives in a small community of less than 5000 inhabitants and the value of his home or farm is between $4,500 and $4,820. The chances are just about 50-50 that he owns the property himself.

Although he is self-reliant and self-supporting, his income is relatively low, only about $20 to $30 weekly. His bank account shows a balance of $300, and the face value of his life insurance policies total $900.

This is the picture of the typical American motorist as revealed by studies of the Maine Petroleum Industries Committee.

The Doakes family ride in a used car that is between four and five years old and now worth about $225 although it was worth more when it was bought in the used car department of the local automobile merchant more than a year ago. The fact is the Doakes family has never had a brand new automobile, believing they could get more transportation for their money by purchasing their vehicles second-hand.

The Doakes family drives about 8,500 miles a year. Most of this driving is to and from business, for family shopping and other family and commercial business purposes. The remaining 45 per cent of the travel is done during summer vacations and for other social and recreational purposes. Only ten per cent of the trips taken, however, are farther than 30 miles from home.

Like all Americans these days, the Doakes family is becoming tax conscious. The federal and state gas oline taxes they pay each year on the 650 gallons of motor fuel they use totals $35.75, while their license plates and drivers' licenses cost them $12.50 more. In addition, they paid federal taxes on lubricating oil, tires and tubes, parts and accessories, so that when the family budget was closed at the end of the year, the Doakes family discovered that their automobile taxes had amounted to almost $56.
